OUR SERVICES

Applied Behavior Analysis (ABA)

Autism Learning Partners embrace a behavior analytic approach to treatment. A distinguishing characteristic of Applied Behavior Analysis is the emphasis on the demonstration of the relationship between treatment interventions and socially significant behavioral change.

Applied Behavior Analysis, to date, is the only proven practice and the only methodology endorsed by the Surgeon General and currently covered by insurance.

Social Skills Instruction

We begin the process of program design with an appropriate evaluation of an individual's entry-level skills. Following the evaluation phase, we use best practices and evidence-based interventions for learners who exhibit social skill problems and other challenging behaviors. More specifically, we "match" our interventions to the strengths of a learner (e.g., strength-based intervention) and the most critical behavioral excesses (e.g., excessive conversation regarding a particular topic) or skill deficits (e.g., an individual that does not know how to enter into a conversation) exhibited by a learner.

The assessment and intervention "matching" process is different from a one-size-fits-all approach that involves generic behavioral interventions for unique and individual behavioral excesses and deficits. We believe that achievement in the domain of social interaction greatly improves the quality of life for a learner and we place a premium on screening, assessment, and individually tailored interventions.

Parent Training

Providing effective treatment to families of children with Autism Spectrum Disorders requires the establishment of a partnership between treatment staff and parents. This partnership involves many elements, including effective communication, mutual respect, clear boundaries, and clearly defined roles.

Although every treatment team member plays a role on the team, parents play the key role. They are the most important members of their child's treatment team. While treatment staff will come and go, parents will remain the central axis of any treatment team.

Telepractice

Advances in technology have tremendously expanded our capacity to deliver the same high quality services to children and families no matter where they live. Technology makes it possible to bring highly trained professionals to families without diminishing the level of care.

"Involve the family in treatment - family is constant."
